Peculiarities such as the order Strepsitera in which the female parasites never live apart from the host insect while the males fly freely are well described. And it is not only the showy and intelligent mimics, such as the mantis of Hymenopodidae, that take over the mind. All photography torments the desire to know more, see more, go out and observe nature. Included are the most common, economically and ecologically important, interesting and attractive insects in the region: Charles Griffiths, Department of Zoology, University of Cape Town. Alan Weaving is a retired entomologist with a particular interest in wasps and has published two books on the diversity of southern Africa's insects. All or most of them appear to have been taken away with insects in situ. About the Author: Charles Griffiths, Department of Zoology, University of Cape Town. It also discusses collecting, exhibiting and curating insects and explains "How to use this book." Dr Mike Picker (professor of the Department of Zoology, UCT), Professor Charles Griffiths (head of the Department of Zoology, UCT) and Alan Weaving (a retired entomologist) have published more than a hundred scientific articles on insects and marine life, a series of popular articles and photographs of natural history and several books, including the bestseller A Guide to Marine Life for Southern Africa (Griffiths, Branch and Beckley) and Weaving's Southern African Insects and their World (2000). The succinct text provides sufficient detail to ensure that the manners and likely whereabouts of a family are understood. He has a very broad knowledge of the natural history and ecology of the rich South African insect fauna.
